

Very Very Improv Speaking Bio:

Scott Campbell

Scott Campbell is Very Very Improv's Theatre managing artistic director.

Very Very Improv is a professional theatre company based in Langley, British Columbia producing city-quality improvised comedy in the suburbs. At a time when there seem to be so many things wrong in the world, Very Very Improv is giving people a reason to get out of their houses and reminding them that we are all in this together.

Scott is a founding member of the improv troupe The Panic Squad and performed across North America with the company. He is an alumnus of Vancouver's TheatreSports League (now The Improv Centre) and launched Side Show Comedy Improv at the award-winning Pacific Theatre when he was the company's associate producer. He is an experienced actor, director, and theatre instructor.

Scott has also spent 15+ years in fundraising leadership roles. He has contributed to raising over $200M in his career working with a variety of non-profits including international development organizations, arts organizations, and a post-secondary institution. He has extensive experience working in complex organizations, dealing directly with finance, HR, IT, and program delivery departments on operational and strategic initiatives.

Scott is married to Margaret. They live on the traditional and unceded territory of the Sto:lo people, also known as Fort Langley. They have a young adult son and two teenage daughters, all of whom are busy doing their own things.
